

Mishicot View Shows Growth

What appears like water in the foreground is part of Sportsmen's club park. The picture was taken before light poles were installed. Holy Cross Catholic church, Happy Terens service station, the cheese factory and a number of homes, all located on highway 147 south of the bridge, are not shown. The water behind the Sportsmen park and the bridge are east of the Western Condensary plant, also not shown and the largest and most important industry in the village. The main highway is 147 and the large white building at the further end is the Levenhagen Opera house. Just beyond that and across the road is the Twin Rivers co-op elevator and feed mill while immediately west of that, at the juncture of 147 and 163, is the Kakes Super service. Still further west is the Meineke garage. Highway 163 leads to Tisch Mills.

In the long building is the Kronforst electric shop. West of the first clump of trees, the building with the rounding roof, is the Krajnik garage while across the street, only the roofs show, is the Holst Sons company store. The large building on the other side of the street houses a number of businesses including the Ording Badger Grill and the George W. Schmidt plumbing and heating concern.

On the same side of the street with the Holst store, traveling west, is the bank, the Scheuer market and Lambert Bros. garage and implement business. In the square white building at the corner is a tavern, barber shop and beauty parlor while the small building adjacent houses the post office with the home of the Eis &

Wegner Implement company at the next corner. The larger white building in the next block is the home of the Pfingsten Grocery store.

The church in the middle foreground is the Congregational edifice. The high school and the Lutheran church, the fire station and town hall are also shown.

Mishicot is not incorporated but boasts three active organizations, the Lions club, Sportsmen club and Veterans of Foreign Wars. Every business man in the village belongs to one or more of them and every villager is a real booster. The county highway department maintains shops at the village. The highway leading north is the Tannery road. Those, interested in a picture can contact Lions club members.
